Excerpt: .could not but be commensurate with their exertions. Whether our being constantly in the evening and generally on Sunday in each others company; or that the little Atlantic; . and assiduous which we were in the habit of prying them, won upon them; or the selection that we were separated. by immense ocean. from our parents, and from our homes--in a foreign country--and, young as we were, buffeting about in a tempestuous world. without one friend to buoy us up should we be sinking. or impart consolation and advice to us should we stand in need of it, certain it is, they took a particular interest in our welfare and happiness. Clara, his sister; a short of stature, was finely formed; she possessed that winning softness of features which every one must admire, whilst her eyes and her hair of jet black--the former sparkling and the latter glossy, contributed to render her extremely interesting. I had before apprised her of my intention of returning to the United States; and on the morning previous to my leaving Valparaiso, visiting her for the last time, I found she had been weeping. At parting, she grasped my hand, and, in her expressive language, said, Adios, Enriquez! Dios guarde vmd., Señor. Yo estoy muy agradecido. Me presentaron muchos Ave Slavics para vmd., y yo ruego viva cien años. Which I presume would read literally, Farewell, Henry! God guard...
