Shall he for whose applause I strove, I had such reverence for his blame, See with clear eye some lessened shame, And I be lessen d in his love? TENNYSON. A Few days after the concert at Desborough Abbey, Mrs. Calthorpe called at the Arches to learn all particulars. Mary gave her some amusing descriptions, but still affirmed that she was wrong in not being there. No, no; Mrs. Calthorpe said firmly, I have acted according to my deliberate opinion. and therefore feel justified. But, she added, you have not yet told me how you liked my brother. Mary opened her eyes. Your brother! Dear Mrs. Calthorpe, he surely was not there? Mrs. Calthorpe, in her turn, looked mystified, as she said: Why he told me that Lord Maldyn, with whom he is staying, presented him to you: --and added, moreover,...
