And such is now the land, and such the seed, And such the stock whereon the next hour waits To graft this blessed flower of thine own blood. But no! Lord Ulrich swears this shall not be, And even now with horse and foot he comes To spare thy hand a righteous deed, and take This alien s life, and pay thee too in full Thy dues for doublefacedness; for he saith Thou anglest with thy sister s beauty as bait To catch his favoring breath, and winking at A venturer, thou scorn st the hand that lifts The pall of a prince-prelate o er thy back. Then as to this thy sister, he laughs loud, And vaunts that he has ropes and racks enough To stretch...
