Word sufficed, rising as the Sun of Bigtheousness from Judea to send forth His beams, penetrating to the souls of those who were willing to receive Him. The late Dr. Mill, when quoting this passage, shows how the objection of Celsus is at Origen, adv. Cels. , lib. vi. the bottom of the theology of Strauss and his friends. The truth is, that there is a strong objection against revelation altogether, because the very name seems to imply that it is not universal But have we not a universal revelation of good and evil in the light of conscience If all men had obeyed that, they might with some show of justice have pressed their objections. But, as all are bound to confess that, in morals, the knowledge of truth does not necessarily bring about corresponding practice, so they must allow that they cannot...
